James Dornsby Walton of England, and Henry Adams of Bellows Falls, Vt., met a terrible death, Wednesday, while attempting to reach the highest and largest crater of the volcano De tollma in Mexico. After some bantering both men decided to settle the question which are the braver, Englishmen or Americans, the test being the ascent of the volcano. The guides say that, with their respective flags they reached a shelving rock, when a volume of ashes shot from the crater hundreds of feet into the air, walton and Adams, after the ashes had fallen, were seen grasping hands. The next instant a solid volume of lava was vomitted fourth, a height of thousands of feet. Walton and Adams perished in the

M., Thursday, were found at about 9 P. M. that day, in a closet under a sink in a house in process of construction. They had crawled into the closet some time during the day. The door was shut in some way, snapping the catch and making them prisoners. The three boys were dying from auffocation and, when found, the little Barrons girl was slowly sinking. In the longer none of the quartette would have been alive.

On Thursday and Friday there were many fatalities throughout the country occasioned by the heat. Thursday night a man fell dead from heat in Lawrence, Mass. In New York city there were forty-eight cases of prostration by heat and five deaths. In Lowell, Mass., John F. Phillips, local agent of the Boston and Maine railroad system, nearly ever since the Central street depot was built, was overcome by the heat while supervising work, and died from that cause and apoplexy soon after being taken to his rooms. There were twenty-four deaths in New York city on Friday; fifty cases of prostration from the heat in Brooklyn; thirteen deaths from heat in Philadelphia; both man and beast struck down in Washington, D. C. During the five days ending Friday, there were ninety deaths in Chicago from sunstroke. The total number of prostration probably was not short of 500. But a cooler wave has swept over the country to bless it.

Matters remain about the same at Homestead, though most of the mills are being put in operation, and the defeat of the strikers seems to be an assured fact. Undoubtedly the attempted assassination of Mr. Frick contributed much to hasten the defeat of the strikers. Mr. Frick is prenounced out of danger. The Carnegie steel works are not turning out as much as they did before the strikes, for there were then 3800 workmen, and there are now only $50. But the last mill started up Friday, and smoke and steam rose from the buildings an and rain, noon. To the strikers who have returned to work in the mill, about 125, it is said every man has received terrible warnings of dire punishment if he does not quit work at once. The men, on going home, have found sand-bags tied to their doors every morning for a week past, and requests and warnings have been hung on the front knobe. They have received letters through the malls, which contain bloodthirsty threats of punishment for deserting the ranks of the strikers. In addition to this, committees of the strikers have approached each man, and personally warned him of his peril in remaining at work.

The Handelablad publishes letters from Celebeo, giving the details of the recent eruption of the volcano of Gunona on Great Sangir Island. The eruption commenced at 6 P. M., on a day early in June and was unheralded by the slightest seismic warning. Immense volumes of fame and smoke, and masses of stones suddenly burst from the volcano. Stones fell all over the island, killing the natives who were busy in the fields getting in the rice crop. Those that succeeded in reaching home found no refuge, many houses being crushed beneath the weight of falling atones. The roofs collapsed beneath the weight of ashes, burying the inmates, and in many instances whole families. Streams of lava flowed with frightful rapidity down the slopes of the burning mountain, upon which was silvated numerous farms and villages. Houses and fugitives alike were overwhelmed by these rivers of molten rock. It is estimated that over 1000 persons perlabed on the slopes of the mountain, and many hundreds more on the lowlands, but the exact loss of life is not yet known. The week after the eruption had abated the inhabitants were in a state of terror, and many hundreds more on the lowlands, but the exact loss of life is not yet known. The week after the eruption had abated the inhabitants were in a state of terror, and would not approach the scene of the disaster. The island is now threatened with famine, all crops having been destroyed. Cooos trees are still standing, but their lawes and fruit were distroyed, the stems being left bare. A HORRIFYING ÆRIAL TRIP. During the preparation for a balloon ascension and parschute leap by Prof. Blondie Willie Friday night at Lake Quinsigamond, Work cester, Mass., a heavy thunder storm came up, and the balloon escaped from the crowd trying to hold it. On its upward flight it surged into the crowd, and a luckless spectator, Benjamin Long, was caught by the right foot in a loop of rope and carried heavenward, head down.

The balloon shot up like a rocket, and Long was swayed to and fro in his frantic endeavors to get into the parachute. At a least of the parachute was struck which forced the balloon in Gray, July 23, Bras July 23, Augustus W. Hill, aged about 60 years.

The steamer City of Waterville, which in summer piles between Saco and Biddeford Pool, went ashore Friday afternoon in a dense fog at the mouth of the Saco river. She struck a ledge running from the easterly point of Stage Island and was at first thought to be in a perilous position. During the attempt to pull her off the ledge all of her railing on one side was torn out by a hawser, which had been put in near the stern and carried forward. The hawser in flying over struck Frank Goldthwait, a member of the Pool life saving crew, and broke his leg below the knee. The passengers were carried to the Pool in boats and went home in barges. The steamer was built in the summer of 1890 and cost $9000.

There was a unique exhibition on Portland street Friday night, which will interest firemen all over New England. The veteran firemen of Portland have lately formed an association, and have got out their old hand tub Atlantic, which has not been used for 28 years. It has been cleaned and repaired, and Friday night the old firemen gathered to see if it would work as it former gineer Henry Dyer, Robert W. Murphy and Charles H. Rich took turns in giving the commands. Among those who worked at the brakes were Daniel Glazier, John C. L. Gill, James W. Parker, W. G. Googing, C. F. Plummer, Ezra Russell, Frank Merrill, Spencer Rogers, Nahum Littlefield, many of them former chiefs of the department. The old men worked with a will, and forced the old tub to throw a stream is feet through a seven-eighths inch nozele. FIRES IN MAINE. Fire in the Biddeford

Two was not furnished, in common with other papers in the State, with sheets of Agriculture of Maine, 1891-92, in advance of its completion, so that we could say with horses them, "it would soon appear;" but at this In the and we have secured a copy. The volume is a ponderous one of over seven hundred departs, and up of a partial record of the North of Activatives a copy. Pages, made up of a partial record of the work of the Board of Agriculture, a complete reprint of the report of the Experiment Station for the year 1891, the report of the State Pomological Society, prepared by its Secretary, D. H. Kuowlton, and a reprint of the statutes of the Stats reinting to agriculture. Many pages of the station matter has now little of value to the general farming mable, and might have been omit farming public, and might have been omitted, thereby reducing the volume in sizes, without impairing its value. In this we refer to the records of the fertilizer inspection for the spring of 1891, now outlawed tion for the spring of 1891, now outlawed by the lapse of time, and to the statistical weather records as kept by the meteorologist, important as station records, but of alight interest to the public.

Of the institute work of the board, a report in detail is given of the Dairy Conference held at Auburn and the dairymen's meeting held at Dairy Hall, Orono, in connection with the college dairy school, and also some of the more valuable of the papers and lectures given before the different institutes held during the year. Among those of especial value and which we would command to the studious attention of every farmer are, "Specialties in Farming," and "Small Fruits on the Farm," both by the Hon. T. B. Terry of Ohlo, "The Farmer's Garden," by A. W. Cheever, Dedham, Mass., "Horse Breeding," by C. M. Winslow, hrandon, Vt., and "Raising Corn for the Silto," by Thomas Daggett, Foxoroft; and in the dairy line, Governor Hoard's "Talk with the Man who Makes the Milk," "Varia-

President Jerrard says that in the many years of his connection with the State Fair, at no time has there been manifested so active an interest at so early a date, on the part of exhibitors, as has been the case thus far this season, and that, to date, he has had more than double the usual correspondence on the matter.

A well known wool buyer, who has annually for many years purchased large quantities of wool in Franklin county, says that the price paid this year has averaged lower than in any year since he has been in the business.
